SPORT & DISABIL

15% or 1.2 billion people have disabilities, experiencing significant marginalisation and discrimination, including in sport.

Sport has tremendous capacity to promote disability and intersectional inclusion.

Sports stakeholders in all capacities, from policy to practice, are called on to act.

Resources are available to build capacity, while examples exist of major mainstream sporting organisations that have made huge progress.

Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities brought progress we need to mainstream disability in line with policy commitments.

Sport needs to reorient in line with 'human rights and sustainable development' approaches.

Sea change is needed across political will, legislation & policy, understanding & attitude, capacity building, education & training, research data and investment.

'Nothing About Us Without Us' means persons with disabilities need to be at the centre of developments.

Agenda 2030 calls for 'no one to be left behind" - continued discrimination is a failure of the SDGs.

#WeThe15

is a sports led human rights movement to end discrimination
